

INSTITUTE FOR ADVANCED STUDY

Transitional Justice: Seeking Truth and Accountability for Systematic Human Rights Violations

Barbara Frey, Institute for Global Studies
University of Minnesota

Countries emerging from repression, armed conflict, or mass atrocities have sought ways to address the past as a part of their transition into new forms of governance and citizenship.

In this introduction to the topic, Barbara Frey will review some of the methods and mechanisms that have been developed by national and international actors, including public memorials, truth commissions, and national or international criminal prosecutions to assist societies to transition away from their repressive pasts.

Organized by the IAS Reframing Mass Violence: Human Rights and Social Memory in Latin America and Southern Europe Research Collaborative. Cosponsored by the Human Rights Program, and the Center for Holocaust and Genocide Studies.

Thursday, January 23, 3:00 p.m.

235 Nolte Center, 315 Pillsbury Drive S.E.

Free and open to the public; beverages will be served.
Videos of our presentations are available at ias.umn.edu/programs/ias-videos

UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA
Driven to Discover

ias@umn.edu - 612-626-5054 - www.ias.umn.edu