The Conceptual Jew: Reflections on Arendt and Adorno's Post-Holocaust Theories of Anti-Semitism

A Lecture by: Jonathan Judaken, Rhodes College

Wednesday, April 25, 2012
Room 710 Social Sciences Building
4:00 p.m.

Professor Judaken will reconstruct the very different theoretical paradigms of the interactionist and the socio-psychoanalytic that Hannah Arendt and Theodor Adorno developed to understand anti-Semitism.

Jonathan Judaken is the newly appointed Spence L. Wilson Chair in Humanities at Rhodes College. He recently served as the Dunavant Professor of Modern European Cultural and Intellectual History at the University of Memphis. His research focuses on the patterns that underpin prejudice and the underlying assumptions that animate tolerance, values about the nation, race, gender, epistemology, and colonization.

Sponsored by the Center for Holocaust and Genocide Studies and the Center for Jewish Studies.

For more information contact chgs@umn.edu or 612-624-0256

WWW.CHGS.UMN.EDU

COLLEGE OF LIBERAL ARTS
University of Minnesota